

Computer Spyware Remover

Spyware can pose a threat to the normal operation of your computer and the security of your private information. It is imperative that anyone who operates a computer with access to the internet provide the necessary protection to prevent malicious spyware from working against your computer and stealing your information. You can evaluate your need for immediate spyware protection based on your answers to the following questions.

Is your computer experiencing pop-up ads which are not related to the Website you are viewing?

Have there been changes recently to your Web Browser or Desktop that you did not make? The following may be symptoms:

- Different Homepage Settings
- Different Toolbars Appearing
- Security Setting Changes
- Changes to your Favorites List

Have you clicked on links that have taken you to a Web Page you did not expect?

Is your Windows Desktop taking much longer to load than normal?

These symptoms and many others are obvious signs that your computer has become infected with what is known as Spyware. Spyware is a malicious type of Adware (Advertising supported software). Adware is generally a legitimate form of advertising for companies that offer free software (freeware) to consumers. These advertisements generally run in a portion of the software, but do not track your surfing habits or attempt to collect and transfer your personal information to third parties.

Spyware, on the other hand, acts as a Trojan Horse, because it is installed without the user's knowledge. It is a separate executable program that is downloaded unwittingly and attempts to monitor and track user internet activity. The information it collects, which can often be very personal, such as email addresses, credit card information and passwords, is then sent to another party for marketing purposes or to be sold.

The fact is, virtually everything you do on the internet is listed on your hard drive. Spyware is capable of scanning files on your hard drive, monitoring your keystrokes, scanning other applications and performing other malicious activities. Therefore it is vital that every computer owner invest in a good Spyware/Adware removal program. The small investment in a quality Spyware Removal product will provide the protection you need for your computer and your personal data. This is truly one of the best investments you can make to help keep your personal information private.

Free and trial versions of Spyware programs are available, but they generally will only perform a scan of your system without performing any spyware removal. A good Spyware Removal program will give you the freedom and security to surf the internet without having to wonder if someone in cyberspace is snooping and stealing your personal information.

We have the top rated Spyware removal program you can begin using immediately to scan and clean up your system within minutes. Once you download this easy to use Spyware/Adware Removal software, you can set it to scan your system as often as required. This is the best way to ensure you have the security and protection you always need.